Valentine's Ridge in Vietnam, where HM2 Larry Jo Goss died.

Goss follows father's footsteps to Vietnam

In part 2 of this threepart story, Dr. Lori Goss-Reaves shares details of her van trip to find Valentine Ridge, where her father, HM2 Larry Jo Goss, died during the Vietnam war. Her traveling companions included her husband Eric; her father's battalion doctor, Jerry Behrens; Behrens' wife Mary; and their driver Mr. Hai. "Their compassion, intuition, and physical support were invaluable every step of the way." Lori writes.—Ed.

Have you ever experienced moments that seemed like coincidence, yet you wondered if they were something more? Webster's defines coincidence as "the occurrence of events that happen at the same time by accident but seem to have some connection." If there would have been only one or two on our trip, I could have dismissed them. At a certain point so many things had happened that it seemed they were being orchestrated by something (or someone) not bound by this universe. I have no doubt in my mind that it was God.

We left Saigon on Wednesday, December 5. We planned to travel north towards the demilitarized zone (DMZ) to the Quang Tri province. This is the area where my father was killed. Dear friends from home were following our journey on Facebook. Many reminded me to breathe.

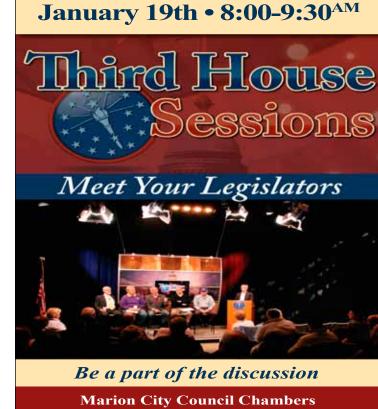

I never thought I would need someone to tell me to breathe, but being so close to where my father took his last breath had, for some reason, changed my breathing. Subconsciously I found myself taking in five to seven rapid, shallow breaths. Normal breathing then followed until the rapid breaths came again. Dr. Behrens taught me to do "belly breathing." This helped, as did playing my mom and dad's favorite song—Hold Me, Kiss Me, Thrill Me by Mel Carter. As I swayed to the music in the hotel room, I imagined my dad was there with

Homer declares: he'll run for mayor

About 50 friends and supporters attended Dave Homer's formal announcement to seek the GOP nomination for mayor of Marion at the Faulkner Center on Saturday morning. Homer cited his long career of public service, including serving as Marion police chief, on the Marion City Council, and in the Grant County prosecutor's office. Homer said he wants to address problems like violence, drugs, response time, communication, vehicle maintenance, and better code enforcement by realigning personnel and adding more police officers. His 20-minute announcement included a broad range of ambitious initiatives. "I believe I'm the best candidate for the job. I know how to get things done," Homer said. Homer joins Steve Henderson on the GOP side as candidates who have declared that they will run for mayor. Incumbent Jess Alumbaugh has already announced that he intends to run for re-election on the Democratic side.

that we live in a fast-paced world. It seems that even technology does all it can to cause us to operate at a rapid speed. It also seems there is always something to do and someplace to go, going from one appointment to another, racing the clock to arrive at our next destination on time. I have always said that one of the greatest joys of going to Heaven will be no need for time. We will be able to throw our time pieces away because time will mean nothing then.

experience I took a college course that focused on the time we have available. The assignment was to break down every hour of the day for one week. No matter how you slice it, no matter how busy we think we are, there are 168 hours in every week. It helped me realize how much time I had. As I filled out my time log every hour of the day for one whole week, I was able to see the time that was at my disposal. I wasn't nearly as busy as I thought I was. we really have? just follow me around for one day, you would know what busy is." That statement might make one think that we are the only ones doing anything. Are we really that busy? Take the 24-hour challenge and log your time. How much time do you really have? I know what you are thinking, "Preacher, I can't be on the go every minute of the day." Every minute we have is a gift, and we should begin to see it that way. How much time do to you than just sitting in your recliner all afternoon.

Years ago one of the men in our church, Jim Mc-Coy, had a massive stroke. I visited him in rehab, not sure he would ever make it. We prayed, he worked, and God healed. What a formula! Now Jim spends a lot of his time visiting cancer patients and others that he knows are struggling. Why would Jim spend his time helping others? The answer is simple, when he couldn't help himself, friends, family, and church came along beside him as cheerleaders to encourage him. Jim will never know the love and respect I have for him. I am thankful for his friendship I could write 100 pages of stories about an hour or two and what it might do for someone else in a time of need. There are so many people who spend a small part of their day helping others. What are we doing to make life better for others? Do we really care? If we do really care, get out there on the front line. Go see that neighbor or friend, lifting them up. It is my prayer every day that I might be an encouragement to all I meet- and make someone laugh. Laughter is great medicine for the soul. Let's get busy!

me. I had come to Vietnam to 'see" him, and for some reason it felt like he knew.

We drove all day through the countryside, finally seeing the Vietnam I had envisioned; Saigon had reminded me of New York City. The view now was a vast contrast. How could wealth and poverty exist in such close proximity? Mary Behrens had carefully planned our itinerary. The first day we travel by van more than 433 kilometers (about 269 miles) and spent the night in Nha Trang, a city of beautiful beaches. I wondered if this was what my father was describing when he wrote to my mom about the country being "beautiful from the air." He told her that he wanted to show it to us one day. My dad would have been humbled by the thought of his battalion surgeon, Dr. Behrens, doing that for him, and amazed that Dr. Behrens cared about him

The next day was even longer. Mr. Hai drove 617 miles before stopping at a hotel in Hue. Jerry described it as "a little sparse." This meant that, even though the bed felt like a rock, it was better than the ground and there were no incoming!

The day I'd been waiting for finally arrived: December 7, 2018! I awoke much earlier than the alarm was set for. I had to look my best. On our three-hour drive to Dong Ha, I connected with our dear friends through Facebook. One asked me to post some specific prayer requests. It was good for me to write out what

The men who served with my dad described two ridges with a gully in between. The executive officer (XO), commanding officer (CO), and chief corpsman (my dad), were all killed. I needed to understand how things went so wrong; to see with my own eyes. I truly believed that somehow God would let me know when we were at the "right spot." I had

as unique as every individual. We draw our dividing lines based on significant parts of our personalities, how we determine what is both acceptable to us and towards others. Boundaries, while important, are not set for life. They tend to flex and develop throughout our life and stem from several sources such as, environment, nature, nurture, and We are shaped by where spirituality. we were born, from the country we reside, to the city we live, to the house we spend most of our time. Each of these things has a profound impact on how we construct our boundaries, react to the boundaries of others, and how we will behave when our boundaries are breached. This is particularly evident when we travel because we often find that different cultures have different approaches to personal space and interaction. Take for example a crowded marketplace in one of Europe's city centers versus an online shopping experience. An individual who has not experienced the hustle and bustle of a marketplace, particularly hometown, is likely to be uncomfortable from time to time with the scattered amount of noises and rush of people moving around in all directions. As such, the experience may be described as an assault on their senses and personal space. Other examples of boundaries that are determined by environmental factors include our occupations, as certain jobs and roles (such as frontline emergency services) lend themselves to being less touched by seeing individuals in distress and are more likely to deal with confrontational situations. The way we have been raised, parented and schooled can have a profound effect on our boundaries in later life. This does not mean that we cannot unlearn or develop new behaviors, but it does mean that we are hardwired with instructions as we go out into the world. Depending on how we are preset, this is likely to determine much of our success or behavior in life. Recognizing these behaviors early on is an important step in adopting the traits we need to become the person we wish to be. Our family and home environment and the behaviors associated with one that is outside of their it can be one of the most Perhaps we are each born difficult types of predetermined instructions to overcome. Within our families we each have a role to play and we tend to slip into the traditions and conventions associated with that role. For example, if you are the youngest sibling in your family, perhaps your boundaries will be much broader since you have had to share toys and received hand-me-downs; in later life, this may manifest in boundaries that mean you place less emphasis on acquiring new things. Starting our own family and generally forming a multitude of friendships across a wider network is an opportunity to break away from the shackles that may have been placed upon us by the family in which we were reared.

predisposed to a certain way of behaving. While there isn't a single gene responsible for addiction, studies show us that genetics have a significant link to a substance abuse and addiction. When considering that nature's part in our play, we not only have to consider the inherited behaviors of our parents but also our earlier ancestors.

Our spiritual beliefs, practices and development allow us to tap in to traditions which avow solutions to the questions of where our boundaries should lie. More contemporary spiritual traditions, such as Buddhism, express that we are each responsible for our happiness and we all have the potential to become enlightened beings. The path to enlightenment, it is said, is by demoncomes easier with time. As Cyberspace may not be the work of the devil after all am learning, little by little, that the internet and Facebook in particular may not be the work of the devil after all. Another installment of that education came late last week. I was doing my earlymorning troll of the news past and present and stumbled onto a trio of photographs on Facebook that had been posted by Rod Smelser, custodian of something called "You know you live in Marion, Indiana, when..." followed by a picture or recollection, usually from someone who left town a long time ago and feels either guilt or sentiment, one or the other or both, about departing from their hometown.

I know this because I have latched onto a similar group associated with my Hawkeye hometown a half-century ago and have been engaged in trying to find a picture of a WWII bomber that hung in front of a bar on a seedy side street in my hometown back in the post-war years. But, never mind, you get the idea.

Anyway, there are photographs of Custer's Last Stand on the Bypass and long-ago, long-gone schools and grocery stores and movie theaters—the Indiana, the Luna Lite, the Paramount and the Lyric, to be specific—and anything else dredged from memory or memorabilia. On this morning, right there on Facebook, were three photos taken on Tuesday, April 23, 1968, of Bobby Kennedy and his wife Ethel riding in an open convertible on S. Washington Street in Marion, en route from the south junction of Indiana 9 and Indiana 37, headed north toward what would be a campaign rally on the south side of the Grant County Courthouse Square. I know all of this because I was there. I took the pictures. Shot them from the rear deck of an open convertible pool press car that was running just ahead of the Kennedy car in the motorcade. There was no information or attribution on Facebook; just the April 1968 date.

So I got on there and said, quite simply, yes, they were in Marion and I was the photographer, back in the days of the late, beloved Marion Leader Tribune newspaper.

Now we have talked about this before: The presidential campaign of '68 and Kennedy and Eugene McCarthy and all that. So we shall not repeat.

Within minutes, Mr. Smelser returned with a fascinating yarn about where those pictures have been for a half-century: "Hi Ed Breen, I remember you and I think you should remember me also. I worked at the C-T for many years, and still am currently. At the time they were starting to go digital, I don't remember exactly what year it was, but at the time I was working in the mail room and they were throwing all these old

The bidding had slowed down and he interjected: 'Come on folks, give me a bid. You can't embarrass me, I've been married 29 years.' The crowd broke up in laughter and the bids started again."

A thanks to Rod Smelser for caring...and so it goes in cyberspace.

Golden Eagles on modest win streak

Panthers fall to Oak Hill

In a low scoring, offensively sloppy CIC affair on Friday night, the Oak Hill Golden Eagles prevailed, winning their fourth straight contest with a 35-24 victory over the Eastbrook Panthers. Neither offense found sustained success, with each team scoring less than 12 points in all four quarters. Eastbrook scored a game-high 12 in the third quarter, while Oak Hill came away with 10 in the second. Both the Panthers and the Golden Eagles struggled with turnovers. Despite their win streak. Oak Hill has continued to have problems with ball control.

"Friday's game was ugly on both sides," Oak Hill Head Coach Kevin Renbarger said. "I am not sure much was to be gained from this game other than we won. We committed another 21 turnovers, which gave us 50 for the last two games."

While the Panthers played well defensively, holding the Golden Eagles to their lowest scoring output of the season, their offense could not capitalize on their opportunities.

"We turned the ball over way too much," Eastbrook Head Coach Greg Allison said. "I think we had over 20 turnovers, and then we shot extremely poor from the field. We only made nine field goals on the night--nine of 34 from the field. That's not a good combination.

Alex Baker led the Panthers with seven points and seven rebounds, while Garrett Holder scored six and Dylan Bragg collected five. Tristen Hayes scored 11 points to lead the Golden Eagles.

Frankton's offense continued to produce in the second half, scoring 52 second half points to secure a 55-point victory. Frankton had four players finish in double figures led by Kayden Key's 26. JJ Hatzell scored 18, Willy Whatley 14, and Rylan Detling 13.

Wyatt Rudy was one of the lone bright spots for the Argylls, leading the team with 16 points, while Grant Brown came away with 12 points, four rebounds, and three assists.

e has been incredible. I'm talking about Indiana Wesleyan's Kyle Mangus who just won't slow down. Last year he led the Wildcats of Greg Tonagel to the school's third NAIA Division II national championship in five short years, and along the way was named the national player of the year.

So, sophomore slump this year? Hardly.

The kid from Warsaw is now back at it and boy has he been something since recovering fully from the broken foot he suffered last year in the national title game.

It started at home vs. Indiana Tech, when the 'Cats were down by 17 early in the second half and looking for help. Enter "superman. Mangus put the 'Cats on his back and dropped 39 on Tech, just one short of his

To show that game was no fluke, Mangus was at it again against Bethel.

With both the 'Cats' centers having fouled out and IWU looking for help, Mangus went on a tear again, throwing in 35 as the 'Cats won it at the buzzer.

So what does Mangus do for an encore against archrival Taylor?

In the first 34 minutes he looks like he is playing his worst game of the season with only four points, and his team was down by 11. On comes the "superman" gear again and off goes Mangus, scoring 15 points in a row to rescue the 'Cats.

Finally, at Huntington University last weekend Mangus and the 'Cats play their best game of the season and the soph throws in 24 points like it was nothing.

Do the math: since the first of the season Mangus has scored just under 30 a game
