Gilead Ministries celebrates 20 years

At least twice during his 20 years as executive director of Gilead Ministries, Bill Sparks reached a point where he felt comfortable with the scope of the ministry. Then God stepped forward with bigger plans.

"When I pulled together six or seven people and started the ministry in January 1999, my goal was to visit 25 to 30 people a month," Sparks said. "The first year, 60 clients, most of them grief clients, were referred to us."

Three years later, Sparks learned through a phone call from a banker that a couple in Lizton. Indiana, had died and left Gilead Ministries more than $100,000 in their estate. Sparks' initial contact with the family came a few years earlier in his role as a deputy coroner when a relative of the Lizton couple died in Marion.

"That money allowed me to devote full-time to Gilead Ministries," Sparks said. At the time, he was working part-time as a deputy coroner and as an assistant chaplain at the Grant County Jail.

Gilead received another unexpected boost in 2013, when Phil and Cindy Fortney invited the ministry to share their new office building at Spencer Avenue and the Bypass. Cindy Fortney has served on the Gilead board for almost 20 years.

Goss retraces her father's footsteps in Vietnam

by Dr. Lori Goss-Reaves

We departed our house on November 30, 2018, at 7:33 pm. My husband Eric joined me as I journeyedto Vietnam to find the ridge where my father was killed in action on February 14, 1968. The Marines named it Valentine's Ridge because the battle occurred on Valentine's Day.

This trip was one I always knew I needed to take once my children were grown. With my youngest son in college, everything fell into place to go the same month my father arrived in Vietnam. Although I would have loved to experience this healing sooner, I thought it best to wait until my children no longer needed me the way a child needs a parent. Although my rational mind knew I would likely return, I could not bear the thought of my children feeling the grief and abandonment I felt as a child if I did not.

My dad showed incredible courage during the battle where he lost his life. In the face of mortar fire, he saved the life of a wounded Marine and treated his Captain and Lieutenant, both of whom were mortally wounded. I had to let him know that we never forgot him, and that he was still deeply loved by my Mom and me.

As we boarded the airplane, I thought of the anguish my Dad's heart had to feel as he flew to Vietnam alone, knowing he might never see home again. I tried to not think about how he must have felt the last time he embraced my mom and kissed us both goodbye. Almost exactly a month before his death, my father wrote in a letter home to my mom, "A man should see his children grow up. War is Hell isn't it. But Love will last forever."

I had a copy of my dad's diary with me and excerpts of his letters. I wanted to go to every place he wrote about: Dog Ha, Camp Carol, Ca Lu, Da Nang, Hill 484, the LZ, the Rockpile, and the Little Rockpile. I needed to see the river he crossed on a patrol just days before the battle. "Charlie" had been hitting them with mortars, enticing them to come looking for him. I needed to feel my dad's presence. I believed that, as I walked where he had walked and stood where desk, I am thinking about all that I have to be thankful for. Just to have another year is a real joy and blessing to me. With each new year always comes new challenges, obstacles, and above all else, new resolutions. Have you made any New Year's resolutions? Have you broken them already? I always try to embrace the changes that each new year brings with an attitude that this one will be better than the last one. I must confess that last year was pretty good to me.

I believe everyone ought to make time to reflect. There are several questions we can ask about the past. What good things happened last year? This is obviously a very

it jogs our memory on the 'good." If we are to have a good year this year, we must recognize the good from the past and build on it. One of the problems we have is focusing on the bad. Yes, we all have those issues that bring back painful thoughts and feelings. Why would we want to dwell on them? Seeing life through the windshield is a lot safer than looking through the rear-view mirror that only visualizes sadness and heartache Another important question to address is "What did I learn last year?" I am always wanting to profit from the seasonings of life. Life's experiences should be character ouilders, not detriments. It is absolutely amazing how

We feel we have been done wrong, or failed so we begin to build up walls that protect us from future issues. This is not God's way! We have a Heavenly Father that truly cares for our well-being, watching out for us at every turn. He never promised to take us out of these problems, but He did promise that He would be there with us every step of the way (Psalm 23). As I begin this New Year,

DOING GOOD

good years of service. While we're talking about elective office, this is a good time to remind and to call for other good people to step forward. This is a year for city and town elections and you have until February 9 to turn in your declaration of candidacy for mayor, city council, town council, clerk, clerk-treasurer, and judge. This is a good time for good people to get involved. Our community needs you. We learned last week that the Marion Redevelopment Commission has over $200,000 in its account and it's available to be used for a variety of purposes. Not too many government treasuries have that kind of money waiting to be spent, so this is indeed good news and it will be good to see on what projects the Commission decides to spend it. There has been a lot of good news all winter about the weather. So far, this has been a mild winter with very little snow. To me this is really good news and I hope it continues. It means less money spent on heating bills, less tax money spent on plowing and salting highways, and fewer car accidents, These are all good things and I think they are worthy of mention. Enjoy it while it lasts, because it's not likely to be like this all winter, but so far, so good!

every individual. We draw our dividing lines based on significant parts of our personalities, how we determine what is both acceptable to us and towards others. Boundaries, while important, are not set for life. They tend to flex and develop throughout our life and stem from several sources such as, environment, nature, nurture, and spirituality.

We are shaped by where we were born, from the country we reside, to the city we live, to the house we spend most of our time. Each of these things has a profound impact on how we construct our boundaries, react to the boundaries of others, and how we will behave when our boundaries are breached. This is particularly evident when we travel because we often find that different cultures have different approaches to personal space and interaction. Take for example a crowded marketplace in one of Europe's city centers versus an online shopping experience. An individual who has not experienced the hustle and bustle of a marketplace, particularly hometown, is likely to be uncomfortable from time to time with the scattered amount of noises and rush of people moving around in all directions. As such, the experience may be described as an assault on their senses and personal space. Other examples of boundaries that are determined by environmental factors include our occupations, as certain jobs and roles (such as frontline emergency services) lend themselves to being less touched by seeing individuals in distress and are more likely to deal with confrontational situations. The way we have been raised, parented and schooled can have a profound effect on our boundaries in later life. This does not mean that we cannot unlearn or develop new behaviors, but it does mean that we are hardwired with instructions as we go out into the world. Depending on how we are preset, this is likely to determine much of our success or behavior in life. Recognizing these behaviors early on is an important step in adopting the traits we need to become the person we wish to be. Our family and home environment and the behaviors associated with one that is outside of their it can be one of the most

There is a myriad of ways we can set out to achieve this and this includes; goal setting, affirmations and meditation. Meditation allows us to take a step back from the background noise or static the mind habitually creates. And being mindful allows us to question how we are coping when buttons testing our boundaries are pushed. The approach is one of responsiveness versus reactiveness: it is better to respond to situawe get older and mature then we are more likely to clearly understand our own limits. It remains important however to continue to grow and develop and as the adage goes, to do something that scares you every day or step out of your comfort zone. We should seek to set an example to others with regards to our boundaries. It is only when globally we are each looking outwards to one another and treating one another as a part of the whole that we will be able to share the resources of the world efficiently. To maintain a system of haves and have-nots requires differentials in boundaries and this is something we should aspire to avoid. While it would be frightening to consider each member of humanity as a clone of another, it is not unreasonable to want the world to live with a shared sense of equanimity.

Talking about Pete Buttigieg, the 36-year-old who went to South Bend St. Joe High School, Harvard University, served in Afghanistan. Talking about he with the seemingly unpronounceable name: Buttigieg. He is of Scottish and Maltese descent. He is openly gay. He is personable, scary smart and is intrigued by the idea of going directly from the City Hall in South Bend to the White House in Washington, DC. It has never been done. No president has gone from mayor to president without stops in between. But we live in a time of going where no man has gone before, don't we? Buttigieg, who is also a Rhodes Scholar—remember Bill Clinton—has eschewed other elective offices, although he did take a serious shot at the chairmanship of the Democrat National Committee a year ago. He lost, but bought a boatload of name recognition among professional Democrats. Says he's not interested in state legislature or governor or Congress or any of those things.

But he has bought some plane tickets to Iowa and he has announced he is not running for a third term as mayor and he has set up a Political Action Committee—the dread PAC—and he is putting some machinery in place in Political reporter Brian Howey started watching Buttigieg a couple of years ago. Here's what he says:

"His speeches have a JFK-style 'pass the torch' aspect." He said last winter. "Go ahead, dismiss this generation. I dare you. But I do think that people are looking for something new. They're looking for something fresh and different. And I think that, as a party, we can't just—first of all, we can't only trot out people who go to work in Washington every day, as representatives of the

Howey goes on:

"Does Buttigieg have a ghost of a chance? Did Jimmy Carter in 1976? Bill Clinton in 1990? Barack Obama in 2006? Or Donald Trump in 2014? The big difference was they were governors and senators and a billionaire.. This, however, is an era of broken molds.' "Am I predicting that Pete Buttigieg has a chance in 2020?," Howey asks "Could there really be a 'President Buttigieg?' It's a bet I wouldn't be inclined to make at this point, but no one was wagering on a President Trump in December 2014. I also won't be laying any money down on Biden, Bernie or Beto at this point."

Too many free throws are spoiling the games

fter nearly a half century of calling sports in the state of Indiana, I have come to one certain conclusion: No one likes the officials. However, what I have seen in high school and college basketball in the state of Indiana this season borders on the absurd.

We still have miles to go before we sleep, but I keep hearing in the back of my mind that there are so few good football officials in Indiana, that the IHSAA is considering going to a Friday and Saturday playoff scenerio so just the good refs can call the tourney games.

Well, I thought that other then the call that cost Eastbrook the state championship, it was a pretty good year in statewide college and pro football.

Not so in hoops.

It hit the overload this past 10 days when in back-to-back local college game, Indiana Wesleyan University played at home—two games in which over 120 foul shots were taken.

If that's the way we are now calling basketball in Indiana, let's just let each team shoot 30 free throws before the crowds arrive, and then start the game where each foul just has that team take the ball back out of bounds.

I even think calling your own fouls can't be any worse than what I saw at IWU the past two home games.

I even think calling your own fouls can't be any worse than what I saw at IWU the past two home games. This isn't partiality one way or the other; it's just that it's hard to watch basketball when whistles are blowing every 60 seconds.

As the great Jay Edwards said after the game last Saturday: "This game had absolutely no flow." A well-respected referee in Indy told me they really need good young officials, but someone may have to recruit them and Greg Rakestraw, who does more games then I do, says the pay really needs to be moved up the ladder.

Some fans looked at me at IWU last weekend as if to say, "Is this what college basketball has become?"

My answer would be: If I continue to broadcast games where they shoot 60 free throws, it may be time for me to head off into the
