that Harry and his father built and the team that he has in place. Our goal is to come alongside the current team and help with the process and overall client experience. Title insurance and the closing process is a legal transaction, and it requires someone who understands the legal intricacies of property rights and transfer. My friend and partner, Michael Hotz, will be a tremendous local resource to the staff.”

“We want to maintain the quality of the title insurance, closing, and real estate services offered to clients while at the same time modernizing for future growth,” Hotz said.

Dailey stated that while there will be changes, particularly with technological upgrades and operational efficiencies, he and Hotz plan to carry on Grant County Abstract’s impeccable legacy.

“We are going to be looking at some of those things to improve the process, but we don’t want to lose the quality and the reputation of Grant County Abstract and what they’ve been able to do. They have an incredible team here. They are very seasoned, very dedicated, very loyal, and they care about their clients. It’s important to keep those things at the forefront, but it’s also important for us too as we get our feet settled to start making some efficiency changes.

“[But] I’m really excited. I love people. I love opportunities, and I’ve always loved building things. I just saw a great team and a great history. I want to continue to [build relationships,] but also continue to provide a very good service in Marion, Indiana. I would put this title company up against anybody. It’s a gem here in Marion, and it’s a gift we have to keep giving to the community.”

There was no indication of whether the Finch company will be relocated to the Insurance Management site, which is at the intersection of Ind. 18 E. and Pennsylvania Street, re remain in its downtown location.

Finch said he will continue to be involved in the business for the foreseeable future.

“I want everyone to know that I am not going anywhere very soon,” Finch said. “I still have a vested interest in the business and plan to take a very long time to transition out. This is my home and I’m not ready to leave it yet.”

Officials at Marion Community Schools have chosen to cancel the Marion High School Hall of Distinction banquet due to restrictions on large events to help prevent the spread of COVID-19.
